Application for Revision of Mine Permit and Closure/Closure Plan Update, Mt. Taylor Mine

This public notice is made by Rio Grande Resources Corporation (RGR) as required by 19.10.9.903 NMAC. On June 10, 2022 RGR submitted to the New Mexico Mining and Minerals Division

Legal Notice

(MMD) an application for revision of its existing Mine Permit No. C1002RE for the Mt. Taylor Mine and for updating the Closure/Closure Plan for this mine. This notice is given in compliance with provisions of the New Mexico Mining Act, Section 69-36-1, NMSA 1978, as amended, and the New Mexico Mining Act Rules (Rules), 19.10.5 NMAC.

The Mt. Taylor Mine is located in Section 24, T13N, R8W, NMPM in Cibola County, near the village of San Mateo. The mine is an inactive, existing uranium mining operation that used underground mining techniques to extract uranium ore from depths of over 3,000 feet below ground surface using room and pillar and stope mining methods. There are no milling facilities within the mine area.

This application is for revision of the mine permit for updating the Closure/Closure Plan, including an expansion of the approved disposal cell.

Opening lead — eight of spades.

Some situations that appear to be an outright guess actually don't involve a guess at all. Today's deal provides a case in point.

South arrives at three notrump after East has overcalled in spades. Declarer wins the opening spade lead with the ace and must then decide whether to attack clubs or diamonds first.

The only threat is East's spades. If they become established and he gains the lead before South can score nine tricks, the contract will fail, with declarer losing a club, a diamond and three spades.

It can be seen that if, in the actual deal, South attacks clubs initially, he will go down. West takes the club ace and returns a spade. When South eventually tries the diamond finesse, East wins and cashes his spades for a one-trick set.

If instead declarer attempts the diamond finesse at trick two, the contract is made. After taking the king, East can establish his spades, but he cannot regain the lead before South makes his contract since West has no spade to lead after winning the club ace.

The question, therefore, is how should declarer know to attack diamonds rather than clubs at trick two? The solution can be arrived at by a series of logical steps.

First, South should reason that the contract cannot be made if East has both the club ace and the diamond king. This possibility is therefore excluded from consideration.

Second, the contract will always succeed if West has the diamond king, regardless of which suit is broached first. So this case is also dismissed from consideration.

The only case that matters, therefore, is the one where West has the club ace and East the diamond king. In that event, diamonds must be attacked at trick two in order to knock out East's entry before his spades are established.

Opening lead — nine of diamonds.

The cuebid of an opponent's suit theoretically shows either a void or the ace of that suit, but there are times when the cuebid is used to show a big hand even when the bidder does not have the suit under control. Here is an example of such a case.

North had too good a hand for a simple raise to game after South had freely bid three hearts. The outlook was certainly slammish — North had 19 high-card points — but he had no idea what his partner had in diamonds. He therefore cuebid diamonds to alert South to the possibility of a slam.

But since South had minimum values for his previous bid, he signed off with four hearts. Still not satisfied, North made another try, this time by cuebidding spades. South could now no longer ignore his partner's persistently strong bidding, so he bid four notrump (Blackwood) and continued on to six hearts after North showed three aces.

All this fine bidding came to naught, however, when South bungled the play. West led the nine of diamonds, and South followed low from dummy. This proved to be fatal when East played the deuce on the nine, an obvious request for West to shift to another suit.

Looking at seven spades in his own hand and three in dummy, West had no problem finding a spade shift, and East ruffed to put the slam down one. Had declarer covered the diamond nine with the ten, he would have made the slam.

Actually, after South bid six hearts, East should have made a Lightner double to ask for an unusual opening lead, in which case West's virtually automatic spade lead would have sealed South's fate beyond recall.

Opening lead — eight of spades.

Some situations that appear to be an outright guess actually don't involve a guess at all. Today's deal provides a case in point.

South arrives at three notrump after East has overcalled in spades. Declarer wins the opening spade lead with the ace and must then decide whether to attack clubs or diamonds first.

The only threat is East's spades. If they become established and he gains the lead before South can score nine tricks, the contract will fail, with declarer losing a club, a diamond and three spades.

First things first

It can be seen that if, in the actual deal, South attacks clubs initially, he will go down. West takes the club ace and returns a spade. When South eventually tries the diamond finesse, East wins and cashes his spades for a one-trick set.

If instead declarer attempts the diamond finesse at trick two, the contract is made. After taking the king, East can establish his spades, but he cannot regain the lead before South makes his contract since West has no spade to lead after winning the club ace.

The question, therefore, is how should declarer know to attack diamonds rather than clubs at trick two? The solution can be arrived at by a series of logical steps.

First, South should reason that the contract cannot be made if East has both the club ace and the diamond king. This possibility is therefore excluded from consideration.

Second, the contract will always succeed if West has the diamond king, regardless of which suit is broached first. So this case is also dismissed from consideration.

The only case that matters, therefore, is the one where West has the club ace and East the diamond king. In that event, diamonds must be attacked at trick two in order to knock out East's entry before his spades are established.

Opening lead — nine of diamonds.

The cuebid of an opponent's suit theoretically shows either a void or the ace of that suit, but there are times when the cuebid is used to show a big hand even when the bidder does not have the suit under control. Here is an example of such a case.

North had too good a hand for a simple raise to game after South had freely bid three hearts. The outlook was certainly slammish — North had 19 high-card points —

but he had no idea what his partner had in diamonds. He therefore cuebid diamonds to alert South to the possibility of a slam.

But since South had minimum values for his previous bid, he signed off with four hearts. Still not satisfied, North made another try, this time by cuebidding spades. South could now no longer ignore his partner's persistently strong bidding, so he bid four notrump (Blackwood) and continued on to six hearts after North showed three aces.

All this fine bidding came to naught, however, when South bungled the play. West led the nine of diamonds, and South followed low from dummy. This proved to be fatal when East played the deuce on the nine, an obvious request for West to shift to another suit.

Looking at seven spades in his own hand and three in dummy, West had no problem finding a spade shift, and East ruffed to put the slam down one. Had declarer covered the diamond nine with the ten, he would have made the slam.

Actually, after South bid six hearts, East should have made a Lightner double to ask for an unusual opening lead, in which case West's virtually automatic spade lead would have sealed South's fate beyond recall.

Tomorrow: Bidding quiz.
